Waltron Opens New Facility

Last Tuesday, local dignitaries, along with customers, suppliers, and advisors came together to celebrate the relocation of Waltron Bull & Roberts, LLC to its new facility in Flemington, NJ. A Veteran-Owned Company, also on display was the prestigious 2015 Pro Patria Award, which the company won for its extraordinary support of American Veterans and Military Reservists.

Congressman Leonard Lance (NJ-7) congratulated and commended Jon Guy, Waltron's President and CEO, "We know you had the opportunity to relocate the company to Pennsylvania, and are proud that you chose to keep the company here in Hunterdon County, New Jersey". Also present to make remarks were Robert Walton, current Hunterdon County Freeholder and former Waltron employee, and the Mayor of Raritan Township, Craig O'Brien. Guy, a 1986 Graduate of West Point, and O'Brien, a 1989 Graduate of Annapolis, traded jibes about the upcoming Army-Navy Game. O'Brien remarked, "Despite that, we are truly delighted to have a grand, old company like Waltron relocate to Raritan Township. Anyone who makes payroll and helps put food on the table for so many families is a hero in my book."

Established in 1903, Waltron is one of the oldest, most experienced water chemistry companies in the world. Today the company designs and manufactures the highest quality water analysis instruments at sites in the USA and Europe for world-wide applications in power generation and other industries. The company changed ownership in 2014 when Guy and a team of veterans purchased Waltron from its prior owner of 40 years.
